Balochistan volcano waiting to go off

Both countries suspect each other of supporting the groups operating on the other side of border

ISLAMABAD

THIS week's airstrikes between Iran and Pakistan that killed at least 11 people mark a significant escalation in fraught relations between the neighbours.

Long-running, low-level insurgencies on either side of the border have frustrated both countries, and the apparent targets of the strikes— Iran's on Tuesday and Pakistan's response on Thursday —were insurgent groups whose goal is an independent Baluchistan for ethnic Baluch areas in Iran, Pakistan and Afghanistan. Iran and Pakistan share a 900-kilometre. Both countries have suspected each other of supporting the groups operating on other side of border. Pakistan said its strikes in Iran on Thursday were aimed at hideouts of the Baluchistan Liberation Army (BLA) and the Baluchistan Liberation Front. It also wanted to send a message that it can fight back if provoked.

Iran's military on Thursday began a planned annual air defence drill stretching from Chabahar near Pakistan in the east, all the way across the country to its border with Iraq in the west. The drill will include live fire from drones and air defense systems.

Fresh strikes by Iran and Pakistan cannot be ruled out, although this week's attacks raise questions about the preparedness of their own militaries, particularly their radar and air defence systems. Launching these strikes allows Tehran to point to it directly taking military action without risking a wider confrontation with either Israel or the US, particularly as tensions also remain high over Iran's rapidly advancing nuclear programme.

However, the airstrikes could backfire on Pakistan because BLA said it will avenge the killings. Iran and Pakistan have long had a volatile relationship, but these strikes are likely prompted by internal dynamics. Pakistan's attack also served a domestic purpose, according to analysts. AP

China offers to broker peace amid rising Pak-Iran tensions

BEIJING

CHINA on Thursday offered to play a 'constructive role' to ease tension between Pakistan and Iran following their missile strikes against each other over the last two days and asked the two countries to "exercise restraint and calmness and avoid escalation."

"Iran and Pakistan are close neighbours and countries who have influence and keep friendly relations with China. China sincerely hopes that the two sides will remain calm and restraint and avoid escalation of the tension. If there is need from the two sides, we would like to play a constructive role in cooling down the situation," Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesperson Mao Ning said.

To a question whether China considered Iran's airstrikes on a camp of the Sunni militant group. Jaish al-Adl in Balochistan a violation of UN Charter principles, Mao said, "China stands for handling the relations between countries based on the purposes and principles of the UN Charter and international law, and respecting and protecting all countries' sovereign independence and integrity." China's offer to mediate can be a tightrope walk for as Pakistan, a Sunni majority, and Iran, with predominantly a Shia majority, have tenuous relationship.Russia's foreign ministry on Thursday called on Iran and Pakistan to show maximum restraint and solve their differences through diplomacy, Reuters reported.
